HER FONDEST WISH.

They were walking down Main Street, talking of old school days. The elder of the two women was entertaining the "fond, familiar friend" of her girlhood, who had just arrived on a brief visit. The visitor had been two years married, and her whilom school friend had marveled at the change marriage had wrought. The old, impulsive laugh had given place to a sigh, the quick step changed to a dragging pace. The face was sallow, the eyes were dull.

Just then there passed them a comely woman with bright, healthy complexion, beaming eyes, erect figure and elastic step. Health seemed to radiate from her with every movement. For the first time since her visit the interest of her guest seemed aroused, and as she turned her head to watch the retreating figure, she cried in tones that came from the heart "Oh! What would I not give to be like that woman. To have such a complexion, such brightness, such energy."

"Well," said her companion, "You can have all that if you want it?" "If I want it! Why, health is the fondest wish of my life. I don't live now. I only exist. But what do you mean by saying I can be like that hearty, healthy, vigorous woman? It is impossible. She has something to draw on; stamina, constitution, something that I am utterly deficient in. How I wish I were as she is." "My dear," said her friend, "if your wish has carried you one step toward the goal of health. But wishing must give place to willing before you can move farther. My father had a clerk who was a poor penman. One morning the mail brought a letter, written in the most perfect commercial hand. The clerk said to my father, "How I wish I could write like that. I'd give a hundred dollars to be able to do it." "You can do it," was the answer, "but not by wishing. You must will to do it and work to do it. Take this letter, copy it as fairly as you can once every day for three months. At the end of that time you will be as perfect a penman as the man who wrote this letter." And he was. Now let me tell you

'But to wish more virtue is to gain,'

THAT WOMAN'S STORY.

She had three children in the first three years of her married life, and at the end of that time she was nothing but a wreck. She had severe trouble with the womb, which caused her agony, her nerves were shattered, she lost flesh, her rounded cheeks fell in, her eye grew dull, she could barely drag herself about. "And how did she recover?" the guest broke in eagerly. "Did you ever hear of Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription and 'Golden Medical Discovery?'" "Why, they are patent medicines, aren't they?" was the reply of the visitor. "Of course they are," was the response.

"Do you know of anything of great public utility that is not patented?"

"You came here in a patented Pullman Car. You sit in a patent rocker. You wear a patent safety hook, I see, to hold up your dress, and yet object to patent medicine. In everything else a patent is an honor. It puts the government back of the thing patented. It guarantees the public protection from fraudulent imitation of valuable articles. Why should not a government patent be a veritable badge of honor to a medicine? It really is. A patent is really a crown of merit which the government awards to the skill, patience, labor and thought that enrich the world with a new commodity or a new device. Every patent medicine begins with a formula that is common property. It is the skill to combine, the discovery of one more needed ingredient, the exact relation of the remedy to the needs of the body that lifts it out of the common formula and gives it a claim to be honored by a patent."

"But do you really mean to say that Dr. Pierce's medicines made her

A PERFECTLY WELL WOMAN?"

"I mean to say just that," was the answer. "She had tried everything. Her local doctors had experimented with her. She was broken in health and bankrupt in hope. Then, when calling on a friend, she happened to pick up a copy of Dr. Pierce's great medical book, the "Common Sense Medical Adviser." Turning over the pages idly she read passages that impressed her with the practical common sense of the views advanced. She discovered that she had been at war with nature and must be reconciled. . . . But not to prolong the story, it led to her taking Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription and 'Golden Medical Discovery,' and the result is what you see."

A Porto Rico Wedding.

In view of the fact that Porto Rico now belongs to the United States, and of the further fact that some of the many Westerners going there may fall in love and want to get married the description of a wedding service, from the pen of R. H. Murch, a Burlingame boy in the United States Signal Service, cannot fail of attracting interest—his letter being dated at Coamo, Porto Rico, April 1, and addressed to "The Burlingame Enterprise":

"While in charge of the office at Fajardo I had the good fortune to witness a Porto Rican wedding. It was amusing in the extreme, but, being the only American present, I tried to uphold the dignity of the country by not committing any rash act. Of course, it was in the church, and they were married by a Catholic priest, so we went early, so as to get a seat in the front row. I want to remark here that the church was decorated far more beautifully than I have ever seen one in America. But you don't have tropical flowers there. In probably half an hour after we had got comfortably seated every one commenced to talk, and in no low and musical voice, either. Wondering what it was all about, I looked around and saw the bridegroom coming up the aisle, flanked on either side by a row of altar boys bearing torches. He advanced to the priest, and immediately was surrounded by the torchbearers. Then the priest opened the Bible and read a verse in Spanish—he couldn't read anything else—after which he offered up a prayer.

"The bridegroom then went out some place. I never knew just where, but he disappeared. All eyes were again turned toward the door. This time it was the bride, but with her father only. And such a vision of loveliness was never before beheld in Porto Rico. She was not more than seventeen, but might easily have been taken for twenty-three by a person not used to the tropics. With head erect, she walked with unfaltering step straight forward, her left hand grasping her father's arm. Two pretty little girls carried the train of her robe, which was enough to make an American girl's heart beat quickly, not costing a cent less than a thousand. About the same ceremony was gone through, except that the father—mean man—walked away and left the poor girl standing there alone.

"After reading out of the Bible and a little more talk, she left also. Then for a third time there was commotion, and they came together, when the same performance was repeated, after which everybody left the church for the home of the bridegroom. Here the Juez said a few words, and they were Mr. and Mrs. Antonio Barcelo. Now, imagine great big, grown men hugging and kissing each other. That's what they did. Well, the bride is not allowed out of the house for eight long days, but what that is done for I could not learn. Asked two or three, and they shrugged their shoulders and simply said, "Yo no se," or "I cannot tell you." One very strange thing is that when a man marries he takes for his "extra" or "other name" that of his mother-in-law. Isn't that horrible, boys? For instance, John Jones marries Mrs. Maria Hayseed's daughter—his name forever will be "John Jones Maria."—Kansas City Journal.

"Myself--und Gott."

The poem that Captain Coghlan of the Raleigh recently recited, to the displeasure of the kaiser, "Myself—und Gott," was written by a newspaper man formerly of this city, whose name was Gordon. He was a fellow of infinite parts, had graduated at Oxford and possessed much knowledge of newspaper work. Gordon did not hit it off in this city at first to any extent. He came here and found no opening; so he went to the then proprietors of The Herald and proposed to take the work of both the telegraph editor and the proof reader for one man's pay. The two men were discharged and Gordon was given the double duty. It must be admitted that he filled the place very well, much to the disgust of the rest of the newspaper workers, who were hoping that he would "fall down." He kept up his end so well, in fact, that a conspiracy was hatched for his undoing. A purse of $12 was made up and the strongest headed and stomached man on the paper was induced to take the money and get Gordon on a drinking match, so that he would be unable to do his work, with the hope that this would lead to the reinstatement of the two men whose positions he had usurped. A man was selected who had had a large and varied experience in drinking, and he easily got Gordon to go out early in the afternoon and take a drink. The boys watched them go out with glee, for their champion had the reputation of being able to hold more liquor and carry it better than any two men in town. The hour of going to work approached and Gordon did not show up, and then hope resolved itself into certainty, which was again transformed into panic as, just a little late, Gordon have in sight, slightly flushed, but still steady and composed. He set to work, edited all of the telegraph and read all of the proof, and when he got "30" put on his hat, got up and asked the crowd out to have a nightcap. No one felt cheery enough to accept, and a search party was sent out for the office champion. He was found in the back room of a saloon, dead to the world, his $12 gone, and all the money he had been able to borrow during the afternoon gone with it down Gordon's throat. The latter next day asked after his companion of the day before with a sardonic smile, and seemed unduly elated when he was told that the poor fellow was in the hands of a doctor, as he had indications of the presence in his room of red, white and blue hippopotami setting up $12 drinks to animated tanks dressed in top boots and pink parasols. No more plots were put up on Gordon, who held his dual place as long as he wanted it, and then drifted away to win renown as the author of a poem that has set the kaiser by the ears and almost involved in discord two great nations. Gordon drifted to Canada, served on the Herald of Montreal, where he died a short time ago.—Otheman Stevens in L. A. Herald

MORE money is being invested in the copper mining industry this year than in any half dozen previous years. Zinc also is attracting a large amount of attention, it, like copper, having risen in price to a point which makes it an object of unusual interest.

Some Mean Men.

"The meanest man I ever knew," said the short passenger, "was a fellow who got a football and painted it to look like a watermelon. Then during the summer months he kept it conspicuously displayed in his back yard and amused himself setting a savage bulldog on hungry people who happened to take a fancy to the bogus melon."

"He certainly had his mean points," said the tall passenger, "but I know a fellow who could give him a discount and then beat him at his own game. I was in a restaurant once where this fellow was getting his dinner. After he had finished he called the waiter who had served him and asked:

"'How much do you get for a tip, as a rule?'

"The waiter's eyes sparkled; he rubbed his hands together, and replied:

"Well, sah, we gin'ally gits at least a quatah, but sometimes nice, genteel, prosperous-lookin' gemmans like you gives us 50 cents.'

"Then what did this fellow do but put on his hat and say:

"Thanks. I merely wanted to know how much I was going to be ahead by not giving you anything."—Chicago News.

Its Glory Departed.

"The Arizona Republican" has issued a 'spring edition" of itself at its office, in Phoenix, Arizona. The edition is of twenty-four pages and of ten thousand copies. We learn many things from an editorial headed "The Arizona of To-day." We are disappointed to learn that there is no longer a West such as we dreamed of in boyhood. The state of affairs in Phoenix is appalling to the romantic. "The Republican" says:

"Phoenix is so peaceable that three policemen suffice for its 15,000 inhabitants. The average citizen of Phoenix is as much at his ease in evening dress as is the box-frequenter of the Metropolitan Opera House."

Ichabod! The glory is departed from Phoenix!—The Hartford (Con.) Courant.

A witness who appeared the other day before the Washington Industrial Commission, which is making an inquiry into the operation of trusts, said he knew of men who are paid a bonus for being idle. That witness can win an eternal place in the esteem of mankind if he will give the secret away.—S. F. Call.

The enemies of the Nicaragua canal are not saying much these days, but it may be safely inferred that they are not letting any tropical grass grow under their feet.—L. A. Express.
