Yuma County Deputy Slain

PARKER, Feb. 4. (AP)—Deputy Sheriff Walter Akers, about 38, died early Wednesday of shotgun wounds suffered when he attempted to make an arrest.

Held in the county jail at Yuma as the slayer is John Franklin, 75-year-old Negro bootblack.

Akers was shot down as he stepped from his automobile near the railroad station about 11:30 p. m. He died at 12:55 a. m.

He was the second Yuma county deputy sheriff slain in recent weeks. Sylvester Villa was killed at Yuma while trailing a burglar.

Deputy Sheriff Jack Harold, who accompanied Akers to the railroad station, reported that Franklin had planned to leave on the train Tuesday night but had become intoxicated and was told by the station agent he could not get on the train.

Harold said Franklin later reappeared with a shotgun in an effort to force his way onto the train. Officers were called and upon their arrival the shooting occurred. Harold arrested Franklin.

Akers was a former state highway patrolman and Yuma city policeman.

He is survived by his wife and a child. He had been stationed here four years.

who had apparently tapped a much larger source of water in very deep wells.

"In my opinion," he said, "passage of the code should add to the development of Arizona, since those who spend money to pioneer new basins will have insurance that the speculator will not ruin his investment by overpumpage."

Cites San Simon Section

He said this is happening in the San Simon area, where farmers from Pinal county, a heavily overpumped section, are moving to the San Simon area, a relatively undeveloped section.

However, Turner added, about half of the wells which are flowing 24 hours a day on unused land are owned by the U. S. government in the San Simon area.

The senate and house judiciary committees held another of a series of joint meetings at which Turner discussed technical phases of the state's ground water situation.

Turner told the committees the critical areas are the Salt river valley and Pinal county. Under questioning by legislators, he expressed the opinion that a moratorium on pumping would not solve "the whole question, but would help."

Domestic Uses Exempted

It was understood the legislators had reached an agreement that water used by municipalities and private companies for domestic purposes would be exempt from provisions of the code now under consideration.

The house agriculture and irrigation committee will hold a public hearing at 1 p. m. Thursday on ground water legislation. Farmers have been invited to attend.

The house is in recess until 10 a. m. Friday and the senate until 10 a. m. Thursday.

Palestine

could develop into a Gihad (Mohammedan holy war). It could swell until it became a third world war.

The only safeguard against this is the quick establishment of an armed force in Palestine under the auspices of the United Nations.

The UN Palestine commission, made up of five countries, has the titanic job of setting up the two provisional states, and doing it in the next two months—by Mar. 31. Then by mid-May the British are to give up their mandate and pull out, leaving the commission in control until both governments become completely independent.

That's theoretically what is to happen—and uneasy is the commission's head under the weight of this crown of responsibility.

Decision

tered into previous to the effective date of its adoption.

In regard to police power, the court held:

"The right of contract may be regulated by proper use of the police power of the state. Legislation in aid of this police power carries with it a strong presumption of validity, placing the burden of proof on him who attacks it.

"It is not the province of the courts to review either the wisdom or practicability of the amendment nor does the earnest conflict of opinion on these matters bring it within judicial cognizance. Such legislation can be annulled by court decision only if it is palpably in excess of legislative power, if it is without any rational basis, and if on no reasonable theory could it contribute to the public health, welfare or safety."

Amendment Held Reasonable

The court asserted that the amendment, in addition, was not indefensible on the grounds of reasonableness. It pointed out that the national labor relations act prohibits "yellow dog contracts" in much the same fashion as the state legislature prohibited them in Arizona.

"If it is proper to legislate to the effect that no employe shall be forced as a condition of employment to be a nonunion man, it would seem that legislation providing that no employe shall be forced, as a condition of employment, to be a union man, would be but a logical counterpart."

The court asserted that organized labor in its suit conceded that in the field of interstate industries the national labor relations act provides the protection they seek.

"In regard to those industries whose business is wholly intrastate we must point out the equal protection clause requires only 'that all persons subject to such legislation shall be treated alike, under like circumstances and conditions, both in privileges conferred and liabilities imposed'," the court said.

Meets Test

"There is no question but that this test is here met. Nor is it necessary for the people to have encompassed in one constitutional amendment for all the evils which may or do arise in the field of employer-employe relations."

In ruling that the right to work amendment does not prevent, restrict or "even attempt" to regulate the freedom of men to speak, assemble or think, the court referred to a statement in the recent decision of the supreme court of North Carolina. The statement read:

"On the contrary, it seems to us that (the law) may serve to secure the rights of free speech and assembly to all persons concerned. The statute protects the rights of workmen to express their individual opinions by refusing to join unions, the right of either side, or any faction of any side, to a labor controversy to assemble and publicize its own ideas remains inviolate."

Refers To U. S. Law

The Arizona court pointed out: "Evidently the people of Arizona determined that in the public interest the weapons which labor might use in obtaining its ends required further restriction.

"On the national scene the Taft-Hartley act undoubtedly was adopted for that very purpose."

The right-to-work amendment was passed by the voters November, 1946, by a vote of 61,875 to 49,557. When the American Federation of Labor joined with other Arizona unions to attack its legality, Maricopa County Superior Court Judge M. T. Phelps upheld its constitutionality July 25, 1947.

In Dosses' show there were many black gowns, although colors shown included hay-green silk prints, blue-white cotton prints, and considerable light wool and linen. He had a certain color of red which appeared repeatedly in organdies and silks as bows tied around the waist.

Some of his neck lines were extremely low. One little number of a white waist and black silk skirt exposed most of the bosom. It was pretty exciting. It was meant to be.

The government cautioned against the danger of a race between rising prices and personal incomes, saying prices "always win in the long run." The white paper said wage earners always are the greatest sufferers.

"There's no justification at the present time for any rise in income from profits, rent or other like sources," the white paper said. "Rises in wages or salaries should only be asked for and agreed upon in the exceptional cases."

give the depth and diameter of each new well and depth and general specification of any other work, the thickness in feet and physical character of each bed, stratum or formation penetrated by each well; length and position in feet below the land surface, and commercial specifications of all casing used; location and specifications of each screen or perforated zone in the casing, tested capacity of each well in gallons per minute, as determined, for a nonflowing well, by measuring the discharge of the pump after continuous operation for at least four hours, or for a day by measuring the natural flow at the land surface.

And Still More

Also to be given is the depth in feet from the land surface to the static ground water level, measured immediately prior to the well capacity test; the drawdown of the water level measured in feet for a nonflowing well, after not less than four hours of continuous operation, or for a flowing well by measuring the natural flow at the land surface; depth in feet from the land surface to the static ground water level, measured immediately prior to the well capacity test; drawdown of the water level measured in feet, for a nonflowing well after not less than four hours of continuous operation and while still in operation, or for a flowing well, the shut-in pressure, measured in feet above the land surface or in pounds per square inch at land surface, and such additional information as may be required by the commissioner to establish compliance with the terms of the permit and provisions of the act.

(If he gets all that right, he gets a certificate of ground water right, maybe.)

If by chance, the farmer or someone else doesn't come under the jurisdiction of the act, he's still hooked. He has to write Williams a letter telling why he thinks he isn't under the jurisdiction of the act.

Or if the farmer has an existing right and the land commissioner's decisions do not affect him, he still has to do a little pencil work. He must advise the commissioner with a declaration of such right, which shall include the following information: Amount of water claimed, for which the water was withdrawn, date or approximate date of the first withdrawal, continuity of use, name of owner and description of land, depth and type of construction of each well, in so far as possible. But if the farmer's information is correct, he's a dead cinch to get the certificate of ground water right.

That's about all the red tape that has to be unwound, unless the location of a well is changed. Then there must be filed with the land commissioner an application to amend the permit. To do this, the farmer gives the same information as if he were asking to drill a new well.
